A survey of Ophiostoma chlamydosporum in China. A survey of the fungus Ophiostoma chlamydosporum was undertaken in China, with a total of 4,734 stromata and 273 spores being collected from 11 provinces. The distribution of the fungus appeared to be concentrated in two regions: the east part of the Yangtze River valley and the northeast part of the Tibetan plateau. The types of hosts infected in each province are also given. The types of hosts found are quite limited and largely confined to trees of the genus Corylus. For months, congressional investigators have been probing the actions of Michael Flynn, Trump's former national security adviser. As the furor over the Russia probe has grown, Mr. Flynn has become a central figure in it. So it's worth asking why so little of his story has been told. To understand the public's discomfort with the Flynn matter, it's worth looking at how conventional it is. The press has repeatedly reported that Mr. Flynn misled his bosses, the Trump campaign, the F.B.I., and the public about his contacts with Russians. Yet, more than eight months later, not much of that story has been confirmed. Indeed, this has been the case from the beginning. Early in the Russia investigation, Mr. Flynn was quietly interviewed by the special counsel, Robert Mueller, and an F.B.I. agent in January 2017. Mr. Mueller had told the White House that he had confidence in Mr. Flynn, a fact that he later confirmed in a letter to Congress. Mr. Flynn and his lawyer have not disclosed why they did not tell the F.B.I. that he was continuing to talk to the Russians in the final weeks of the presidential campaign. At least three people close to Mr. Flynn have said that he did not intentionally deceive the White House. Mr. Flynn's conduct is certainly not unique. In politics, there is often no difference between what you say and what you do. It's become routine for campaign advisers to misrepresent their contacts with foreign officials. Just last week, a campaign adviser for Ms. Conway's husband, George Conway, submitted a report on his meeting with a Russian emissary. The adviser said he was "keen to use his position in the administration to advocate for Russia sanctions." The adviser's contention that he was naive was undermined by his admission that he had been briefed on Russian meddling in the 2d92ce491b
