Q: How to detect the call of a jQuery slideToggle() callback function? I have the following jQuery code: `$(document).ready(function() { $('#1st').click(function() { $('#content div').slideToggle('slow'); }); });` Some content... Click here Some more content... When clicking on the id="1st" div, it should call the slideToggle callback function, which is working fine. However, I would like to be able to detect when the callback function is called. I can't work out how to do this. I don't understand how to work with this question. I've tried using `$('#content div').on('click', function() { ... })` but that did not work. How can I do this? A: You can bind a click handler to the parent and check the event target to see if it is an ancestor of the clicked element. Some content... Click here Some more content... `$('#content').on('click', function(e) { if (e.target.id == '1st') { $(this).slideToggle('slow'); } });` Fiddle Evaluation of Chymical Caffeine Monitoring Device, and Biosensor for Simultaneous Sensing of Caffeine and Atropine in Calculus Matrices.
