In the original Shimoda experiment of 1935, a single sheet of dichromated gelatin was illuminated by a laser beam at a fixed reference angle, producing a distinct holographic pattern. The resultant hologram was shown as a four-panel object. In the following decade, other holographic materials were demonstrated and, perhaps, the most definitive record of these experiments, the reconstruction of a distinct three-dimensional image, was presented in 1991 by Butler et al. (U.S. Pat. No. 4,988,155). Butler et al. illuminate a two-dimensional photographic film or sheet with a laser beam incident at an angle, producing a single holographic panel. The EU is to present its plan to its 28 ministers on Wednesday, two days after an influx of 1 million migrants over the past year triggered several countries to impose border controls and laws requiring migrants to register and be fingerprinted. "The EU is prepared to offer Lebanon, Turkey and Jordan an alternative to sharing the burden of hosting Syrians and to assist these neighboring countries," EU foreign ministers said in a statement after a closed-door meeting to discuss the crisis. Details of how the plan would work are expected to be discussed when EU leaders meet to discuss the issue on Friday. Meanwhile, the European Union said it will donate €200 million ($232 million) to emergency relief operations in Jordan, Lebanon and Turkey. The money will be part of the EU's €1.1 billion ($1.2 billion) humanitarian aid budget for the year. The Syrian government has said more than 3 million people have fled across the borders in recent months. About 800,000 of them have arrived in Turkey. Turkey has agreed to take 10,000, but the offer was criticized by the European Commission and human rights groups. "We have to be aware that refugees are not looking for a better life in Europe, but are escaping a bad life in Syria," Commission spokesman Mark Gray told reporters Tuesday. "We in the Commission feel that support for refugees is not just about giving money," Gray said. The Commission said its plan would allow for Syrian refugees in Europe to 09e8f5149f

Features: Setting-oriented Synchronization of several iTunes libraries with ease Works with any version of iTunes with a minor modification of the DockTool Audible notifications to avoid overwriting configuration files Configurable appearance (Themes) Tutorial: Wishlist: Support for syncing an iTunes library without an iPod Support for DVD Conversion of iPod playlists into iTunes playlists Another Questions. Is iLibs stable enough for daily use? How about the binary distribution? A: I have been using iLibs for quite some time to synchronize music on a MacBook Pro and an iPhone. The DockTool can be downloaded from and it is basically the latest release. There are no updates since more than a year. This tool is stable for daily use. I have tested various other synchronization tools too and iLibs is the best performer. It is simple and easy to use. It is better than others in the fact that it will not overwrite files. Oh, by the way, iLibs is the only tool that I know to back up an iPod without rewriting the songs when the user selects Copy Trans instead of Export to iPod. Oh, if you want to know more about iTunes library and its configuration files, you can check out How to configure iTunes library on a Mac or Windows (for people who did not take the time to read this). Q: Verifying a smooth function I have the next problem. Let $f:N\to \mathbb{R}$ be a smooth function of class C^k. Prove that if $d^2f(\frac{x_0}{x})=1$ for some $x_0\in N$, then f is a constant function. The result that I have found is in relation with the next problem: Prove that a C^∞ function $f:N\to \mathbb{R}$ is constant if for all $x_0\in N$ exists $x_1\in N$ such that $d^2f(\frac{x_0}{x})=$
